Exploring Physician and Patient Relationships with Suffering the Silence

Patients living with complex chronic illness often move from physician to physician during their quest for diagnosis and treatment. How does this experience shape the patient perspective? And why is it that after so many of these physician-patient interactions, patients are left feeling abandoned, dismissed and misunderstood? Join us for a Round Table discussion on how we can improve dialogue between patients and physicians. The discussion will feature a number of patient stories and will then open up for a larger discussion about how together we can work to prevent the trauma of medical dismissal and about how we can build trust and understanding on both sides of the doctors' office.
